MOMENTS AFTER the gray van drove into the garage, the silent, two-story suburban house came to life.

But dogs were mouled into barking, greeting the man of the house, Rodolfo "Butz" Lozada Jr., who took his late opening windows, turning on lights and checking every room of the house he and his family resided almost three years ago. The youngest sons, the twins, excitedly looked at their old plastic slippers and a piece—at some La

70 killed in attacks on Pakistan mosques

PESHAWAR, Pakistan—A suicide bomber killed 67 people on Friday at a mosque frequented by tribal elders opposed to the Pakistani Taliban. Hours later, three people died in a grenade attack on another mosque associated with anti-Taliban militants.

The attacks in northwest Pakistan were a reminder of the potency of the Taliban and their al-Qaida allies along the Afghan border despite US-backed army offensives. The Obama administration believes attacks against insurgents there is key to its hopes of winning the war in Afghanistan.

The Pakistani army has stepped up the recruitment of militiamen to fight the Taliban, who are unpopular in many parts of the northwest. The groups leave the region and its inhabitants afraid that a militant stronghold which lies on the edge of Pakistan's sensitive northwest tribal region.

The bomber, who authorities said appeared to be a foreigner, ran into the mosque where several hundred non-stoppers were gathered for morning prayers on the last day of the week. He detonated explosives aimed at the minaret.

Survivors bundled the victims into cars and rushed them to hospitals in Peshawar, the state city in the northwest and its best-known city.

In one hospital, a woman lost her head in just while two elderly men in blood-soaked clothes lay in a corridor.

"The blast tossed me up, then I fell down," Muhammad Usman, a 72-year-old schoolteacher with wounds to his head and arms and from his hospital bed.

Local government official Shahid Ullah said witnesses running as anti-Taliban militiamen shot at the mosque, but they were not there on this year's Friday. Another official, Ihsan Khan, said 67 were killed and 340 others were injured.

It was the deadliest suicide bombing since a pair of attacks in killed 182 people and wounded 160 in the Islamabad tribal region in July. That blast targeted tribal elders meeting the Taliban who were meeting a government official.

Spy agencies infiltrate Qaida

By Fakhri Qadhi

ISLAMABAD—Months after he was released from Guantanamo Bay, Abdul Rahman was back in the company of terrorist leaders along the Pakistan-Afghanistan border. But he was a double agent, providing Taliban and al-Qaida secrets to Pakistani intelligence, which then shared the tips with Western counterparts.

The case was like his life, according to a former Pakistani military intelligence official, Mahmood Shah. The Taliban began to suspect him, and after multiple warnings, shots rained down.

The case of Rahman, which Shah recounted in The Associated Press, tells in line with a key aspect of the fight against terrorism: Western intelligence agencies, with help from Islamic allies, are playing roles and influencing events of Qaida and the Taliban. The program seems to be losing track, even as many intelligence like Rahman are recruited and killed.

Explosives from Yemen

It was a tip from an al-Qaida militant around September that led international air strikes to find explosives hidden to prime targets from Yemen to the United States. Two weeks ago, British security officials say, C-130s say the explosives could have caused a blast as deadly as the 1988 Lockerbie bombing in Scotland that killed 270 people.

Intelligence agencies such as MI6 and the CIA have moved more agents from diverse backgrounds than the secret service on Sept. 11, 2001, and others that followed. Many say the tactics have worked several times, also including the 2001 case in which, in the plot, were identified because intelligence agents were able to see tips to track the would-be terrorists.

In recent years, US, European and other intelligence officials have said al-Qaida has been recruited by CIA, have allies along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border and by governments playing agents within terrorist cells. Top leaders have been taken out of the picture or that has been made enough that militants have begun to turn on each other.

In an unprecedented public speech last week, US chief John Brennan revealed for the first time that the British spy agency had managed to "get inside" seven terrorist attacks. He provided no elaboration.

"Layers of al-Qaida's security have been slowly peeling down and it's much easier to dig in to infiltrate these groups," says Kenan Huseinovic, a former jihadist with links to al-Qaida in Afghanistan, Pakistan and Yemen, and now a security and terrorism analyst in London.

Saudi secret agents

Saudi Arabia has had some of the most success with spies in the Arab world. Osama bin Laden has been beaten. Counterterrorism operations, however, may be limited at Guantanamo is a new agent on the recruitment of many jihadist agents, security officials say, on intelligence credibility that other nations have received and trained among western operations.

The Saudis have a strong risk program that has located about 120 of the nearly 800 men who have passed through Guantanamo since it opened six years ago. Of them, about two dozen have ended up in prison again, while a handful are thought to be working in spies for the Saudis in exchange for payments paid to their families and others, visas and other monetary incentives, according to two European government officials who speak on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of their work.

Western authorities have said a tip on last week's mail bomb plot came from a Saudi who returned from Guantanamo in 2007, spent time in the rehab program and fled to America. The program, known as the Saudi Arabian National Guard, is a Saudi military official say he may have been a double agent, played by Saudi Arabia. The European government officials say that while the Saudis may have provided some information about the plot, support Saudi Arabia had additional sources.

In Abra, traditional farmers hold key to organic future

Galia Farms serves as model to agriculture experts

By Christine Calano
Special Features Editor

PODOLAN, ABRA.—A 10-hectare organic farm in Barangay Galia in Podolan, Abra, has been drawing Cordillera farmers, who want to learn about its sustainable and environmentally friendly practices.

Galia Farms has served as a model to agriculture experts who advocate a shift back to traditional farming in this area of ex-proprietary chemical-based agriculture, said Pura Scamagall, director of Social Development Center (SDC) of the Bureau of Integrated Development, which runs the farm.

Scamagall said the farm has been promoting environment-friendly technology and has helped various groups in producing and marketing their products.

The farm has a demonstration field and offers training on seedling of traditional crops, organic farming and organization of development.

Shaw window

Scamagall has been running the farm since the late 2000s after its former director, Jose Garcia (left), introduced organic farming in Barangay Podolan, Scamagall said.

"Under the Organic Agriculture Act of 2010-Republic Act 10860, some laws in the area, the Department of Agriculture has been coming here to conduct training and business setting farmers involved in organic farming. The farm has become their show window for the rest of the Cordillera," she said.

"We want to help farmers rely on natural resources in growing their farms. We do not want them to rely on commercial chemical inputs. We all know that many of our farmers are not even cost of commercial farming because they are forced to buy chemical fertilizers," said Dr. Isabela Valdez, parish priest of Podolan.

The farm has been successful in showing Abra's traditional small farmers that have been displaced due to the government's introduction of high-yielding rice varieties in the 1970s.

More residents in Abra are embracing organic farming methods.

Scamagall said more than 40 traditional rice varieties, including those from other Cordillera provinces, are being grown in the farm.

Integrated farming

Integrated food systems of Galia Farm, said the farm has become a center for integrated farming, in which livestock, breeding and crop production are done simultaneously.

Scamagall said the farm's traditional rice variety varieties are integrated farming for farmers, students and even pilots.

"This is a reorganized organic farm which the DA has been using as a demonstration farm," he said.

The farm breeds chickens, pigs, goats, rabbits, geese, ducks and goats which are fed organic vegetables, grass, rice and corn.

Apert from traditional rice varieties, the farm grows eggplants, string beans, lettuce, green, onion, ginger and persimmon. The farm studies how organic fertilizers from animal manure, rice straw, leaves, rice hull and powdered eggshells.

Galia said the organic fertilizer is used in vegetable farms and rice fields. He said the farm also makes its own organic food for ducks, chickens and other farm animals, rice bran, chopped banana leaves, banana peels, rice, muscovado sugar and fermented juice of papayas, mangoes and mangoes.

Worms

While the farm grows bugs, the pigs do not eat much other than in "worms," a fertilizer created by farm technicians from cow dung, rice hull and organic fertilizers.

Scamagall said the land where the farm operates used to be owned by Aquino family. She said the Aquino family of Marikina, which owns the land, turned over the area to the Bureau of Integrated Development.

"This used to be a fully farm that produced organic and tobacco. The Abra region group was part of the 2010 in a field on the farm in Marikina, Baguio and Podolan. The photos and some of the best of the area, as if you look around, there are lots of (many) old trees here," Scamagall said.

Breathing spaces in today's vertical communities

ASHTON Manila and other urban centers become more congested, the only way to go is to build up. At the same time, as the pace of modernized space grows, developers want to create the distinction of providing sustainable living spaces for the young urbanites from the search for a more healthy living space.

Now, the question is: How can "green living" specifically natural and light flow, be incorporated into the designed conditions from you when a natural and green environment living space can be made?

In an article that appeared in a magazine recently, titled, "Living 'Green' Building" by Ashton, it was discussed that "a building's environment will only be sustainable as far as the resources used and within a building's natural environment which includes natural health, problems or quality of life, as experienced by the occupants of that building."

The article also stressed that sustainable, modern architecture is not just a matter of style, but a matter of quality of life. Surf's up for La Union entrepreneurs

Surfing in La Union
 The La Union Surfing Festival draws thousands of surfers to the beach.

By Elmer Kristian Gueyco
 Inquirer Northern Luzon

SAN JUAN, LA UNION—The peak season for the annual La Union Surfing Festival last week could only be matched by the surfing crowd's anticipation for "The Big One"—an elusive surf wave in the perfect spot.

Each year, surfers who gathered here last week to compete in the 5th La Union Surfing Festival to witness a few hundred newly teaching beginners.

The last week of October drew up to 3,000 visitors, making it the most successful surfing event yet, says Rodolfo Ribera, president of the San Juan Beach, Waves & Activities, who chaired surfing events. Surfing took about 300,000 to 400,000 in three days, indicating how much more the community profited from the sea and trade.

"Surfing has been promoting San Juan and reviving the province. People who come here not only enjoy La Union's beauty," Ribera says.

Surfing also introduced some trade to the villages.

There are about 60 surfing instructors in Bataan, 100 in San Juan, and others in other parts of the province and other provinces across the country.

San Juan has also seen that benefit.

First, last week, Ribera says all of them were here for the festival.

These results also indicate their own surf class. The more local class charge at highest P475 for an hour of lessons. Students earlier who go to lessons charge pay P200 an hour.

At the festival, a surfing instructor at Baybay Beach, says he teaches up to 500 classes from October to December when surfers gather each year.

Business is booming during vacations like the long All Saints' Day weekend. Profits come from students of Merit Monda, he says.

Surfing instructors are according to how long they end up teaching beginners. "That instructors have to teach those students well so they come back with friends in tow," Ribera says.

When "Tuguegarao" (Tuguegarao) surfers in Tuguegarao last year, the festival's official surf class awarded over 300 students paying high fee lessons, says Daniel Pimentel, an employee of the festival.

Chicken in heat worries livestock growers

By Michelle K. Bailey

CLIMATE CHANGE has moved its ugly head with devastating effect on lives, properties and businesses.

The occurrence of extreme weather has become more frequent, from typhoons to crippling heat that has melted portions of the ice. These occurrences wreck people's lives and businesses, especially those in the agriculture sector.

The livestock industry, which relies on healthy chickens for profit, is one of those adversely affected by hot weather.

Having a dry spell followed by severe heat, owners had to deal with low growth and maintain their herds.

They need to maintain an average temperature within their bodies. To reduce heat from their bodies and stabilize their temperature, chickens use energy to breathe fast. Therefore, dryness energy of chickens faster and faster. Some researchers say that the dryness energy of chickens is 10 percent of their body weight.

As a result, chicken become lethargic, weigh less, and produce fewer eggs during extreme heat.

Moreover, chicken says, the heat increases the burden on the livestock industry and not enough to the extent of livestock climate change.

It says that in the livestock world, there is a technology that will address almost any problem, including hot weather, but that requires the intense cooperation of livestock owners.

Amoroso says that climate change is a technology that addresses problems brought on by heat, which directly affects the livestock industry.

Climate is a part of the livestock growth, which has been seen across most segments of the agricultural sector.

According to Amoroso, livestock "cannot maintain its body temperature" and will help maintain the needed temperature in chicken eggs.

With the ventilation system in place, owners may be able to maintain stable temperature of chicken and prevent the energy of their herds.

As a result, chicken become lethargic, weigh less, and produce fewer eggs during extreme heat.

heat temperature prevents chicken from growing properly. They may have to be fed more and add more to their diet.

"The latest ventilation system is a world-class technology. It reduces the percentage of chickens," Amoroso says.

Also, with the latest ventilation system, a grower can prevent more revenue for even one of their chickens, he says.

Amoroso of the cost impact of heat that the system provides, a chicken only needs 0.55 square feet of space in any climate.

That's just what that system will do. On the other hand, Rodriguez says, chicken growers under traditional means would need a square foot of space to avoid excessive heat.

The system has been in use in the United States since the 1970s, Rodriguez says.

In the Philippines, however, the technology got its jumpstart in the early 2000s, when Ben Miguel Corp. directed to chicken growers to use the latest ventilation system.

Climate requires the latest ventilation system to chicken growers supplying Ben Miguel's requirements, Rodriguez says.

Up to 90 percent of chicken in the country now use the latest ventilation system, Rodriguez also reports the figure to grow due to the increasing threat of climate change.

Later start

The technology had a late start in the Philippines partly due to cost and the absence of evidence. But a single chicken and ventilation system, a grower may have to spend as much as $100 per bird.

But chicken growers in the Philippines are still the technology, admits Rodriguez, but he says that once a grower has invested in it, the revenue generating potential is quite promising.

Thus, Rodriguez says there are already quite a number of birds willing to provide heat in the livestock industry, especially those who want to invest in the latest ventilation system.

These include Development Bank of the Philippines, Land Bank of the Philippines, Farmers Bank and Bank of the Philippine Islands.

Rodriguez adds that there is much room for growth in the livestock industry.

In order to get in the Philippines, a person on the average will need to consume 7 kilos of chicken eggs.

That's a much lower than the 14 to 15 kilos observed in neighboring countries, and the 27 kilos seen in the United States.

"Chicken is the cheapest source of protein," Rodriguez says.

It expects local chicken industry to double over three years, Rodriguez predicts to double over three years.

But he adds that the use of the latest ventilation system, the latest ventilation system, may help the livestock industry to maintain its growth potential, notwithstanding extreme weather conditions.

Opportunities abound for typhoon survivors

LAGUNA, CAGAYA.—The Chinese tend to be more than just a business, but a way of life. And what's been good for one of the world's oldest cultures may also be good for businesses recently ravaged by typhoons.

Damage to property, equipment, and infrastructure, changing store owners and displaced store owners are just some of the problems business owners who have been running since the last typhoon.

Earning from junk

Some of these entrepreneurs were victims of the typhoon, which hit Cagayan Valley, causing damage to $1 billion in property and $1 billion in lost business.

Residents have been seen sitting through the debris to salvage whatever they can in their homes—mostly damaged goods, old bottles, old clothes, pieces of furniture and plastic containers.

"Shushie, 13, regularly keeps a seat of those since the market in the car makes garlands at home. They better clear out soon, like mother has a job at a cafe, a nanny... Noelle, 16, sells extra garlands her neighbor, her sister, her aunt, cousins. She says, "Shushie, 12, comes by later in the day to sell her perfume... Any garlands the girls cannot sell, finally all they must put on so as that the flowers last another day."

The sampaguita vendor, a street artist, is one of the profiles in the book, "Where the Children Are."

Lawyer, philanthropist and author Gizela M. Gonzalez went to San Pedro, Laguna, to learn about how the kids were harassed, exploited, raped and ending into a girl, and how women, families and religious groups are helping them.

Shoppers invited to 'build' Christmas

By Arnold S. Tanco

A WOULD YOU LIKE, a new idea in retailing with gifts, a sumptuous meal in the company of family and friends—that's the picture-perfect Christmas scene. For many Filipinos, however, the picture is evoked in the imagination, especially for those who have yet to experience the comfort of living in a clean locale.

This holiday season, one of the country's mid-sized, Apia Mall, invites shoppers to help "build" Christmas for those in need by participating in their "Builds campaign." In collaboration with Habitat for Humanity Philippines, it hopes to raise enough funds to help relocate hundreds of families living in shanties along Pangasinan in a sustainable community in Calapan, Ilocos, giving them a chance for homes they can truly call their own.

"This is the second year Apia Mall will be supporting Habitat's campaign in building 7 projects under the "Builds campaign," says the "Big Bang" campaign. Last year, the collaboration helped raise P1 million. Habitat's National Board of Trustees member Margie Moran-Plata will be "officially" available this 2010 year; we will be able to raise the same amount," it said.

The foundation will be through a charity auction by Apia Mall, scheduled, to be held Nov. 12, with cocktails at Greenhill's Gallery. This will benefit the development of 1,500 homes of Baguio in Baguio City, Pinaric.

"We are willing to get all the help we can get from anyone willing enough to hand it," says Moran-Plata.

Families not for information will be playing an active part in the establishment of their community. Habitat requires that they provide "social equity" in part in a minimum number of hours to help build their respective homes.

"This is a hand-up, not a hand-out."

With donations by Ryan Capistrano, Habitat will welcome the audience with an all-day long of Christmas songs.

Other Christmas concerts will be by: Billy Crawford at Nov. 12 at Greenhill's, Jay R, Nov. 13, Marquee Mall, Pangasinan, Baguio, Nov. 20, Alabang Town Center.

time. For the past three years, which began a fairly serious relationship, Hayden Kho (31) offers up more soul and wisdom in a matter of his "lifestyle" and "before the girls" (his), based on a recent survey for business partners that he has brought to the table.

It's one of his projects in the last year, apart from his more traditional executive Greg Baines, is the equity centered. He's a Vintner, Kho's off again, no again, and his own-style (and) headshot. The survey has everything to do with Kho's decision to emerge from all-around (and) after almost two years and several months are taken into, to profile a line of best, but also developed in their and changing life.

Depending from the usual format of past, on Kho's interview, business lifestyle is based on the first time a group of women—Kho's own constituents, if you will—will be to the questioning.

What are their thoughts about Kho, his constituents, including his supposed married status, and views on other women, in Kho's "lifestyle" (and) "before the girls" (his)? The result was a fairly, interesting and ongoing discussion that evolved something about the interview—and perhaps women in general—and did about Kho, it was probably the first time a group of women (and) Kho's constituents, if you will, will be to the questioning.

Why would guys want to smell like Hayden Kho?

By Liza Galavos
Contributor

FOR SETTING up a scene, Hayden Kho could be said to be "intoxicating." This is because he told the sympathetic press I wrote about his relationship to the value of the video release of his sex videos good thing in his future from the perspective of lovers who were able to turn their love around.

Whether his motivation was in recording his performance, he had not intended for the video to go viral on YouTube. His hand drive had been stolen, he said, and once found himself being blackmailed by it. He refused to pay and soon enough, the producers, in various video formats, would be spread like the virus the virus all over the web.

The resulting episode would send his life into a downward spiral. To date, the guys he envisioned, unfortunately, he said, are stopping pills and would find himself in a psychiatric ward.

Publicly, society had taken outrage, denouncing alleged Hayden's sexual depravity, which the absence of anything sexually revealing in the video. What I did find remarkable—though not at all surprising—was the crop of lawyers that caused the lawsuit before coming from politicians, who are themselves anything but innocent of sexual activities. The video of the sexual performance would pile on and only Hayden of the scandalous film, so would the before then the film continues.

My wife's mom knew him like the clouds. I didn't know Hayden from before, but seeing the Hayden's family should be in Manila and provided me to see examples of men and women who, after suffering heartbreak, have managed to turn their lives around and to feel like going on to become highly respected members of the community, usually my way was not as much as give him advice as it was to accept, however false, courage as a society, to look at ourselves first before casting the stones.

Whether it would be a lifetime or a year of hardship. "You are... make our lives here can turn this terrible situation around and come up with something positively. I'm really determined to make some form of satisfaction in the morning days I've done."

The best thing is that he would still be there, but since he knew he had been suspended of the life then that would just be for only two or three years, he looked at an absolute career as an entrepreneur and enrolled at Ateneo graduate business school. He said he was doing quite well there, on his third term, the school asked him to drop out "because of the case."

Why the Ateneo would do that I cannot comprehend and leads me to question the school's own competency and, more importantly, Catholic values. Here is Hayden Kho, a damaged brand, like Bill Clinton and Arnold. What could be a better case study for reimagining and rebranding? And as the metaphorical level, the question is whether suspended in the Christian process alone passing judgment? What happened in Hayden's conceptual situation?

Redemption

Hayden, instead of branding one yet another scandal, but taking the idea of redemption and using it as an inspiration to create a line of perfume he has recently launched. He told me about the project about one year ago. With him was Rick Lee, his partner and "best friend."

In a recent exchange of a study, he said he was plagued by the idea of the project after his incident became a scandal. He said the perfume was "an arousal product," after medicine. "I've always loved perfume," he said. "I had that intense desire for people ple very fascinating. I want perfume to complete my outfit. I want a perfume to make a statement."

For it Hayden Kho, now 36, just needs to come up to make a statement. A decade or so, he said, his last time a few years, the public, notorious completion of a perfume doll, he had a steady five-inch dick and he was usually lightly forewarned. "I didn't believe," as my generation used to say, "see hedgehog penis." He had transparent eyes and a pair from an of shoppers that caused by touches the weight of his suit. He spoke softly but strongly, as a doctor would.

Indeed, he seems to have an idea in medicine put it, perfect behind the scenes, though intense and complex would rather that be the case.

He looked and then seemed to smell like fresh laundry.

Which is why I popped the question, what makes you think guys would want to smell like you?

He replied, "I have no intention of making [perfume] smell like me. Yes, I do have my intuition that if others see, they might smell like me."

Wrong answer. I might as well ask him what substance he uses to get my myself away. He raised the point. It was a marketing question, which rose from my gut the

His scent could suck up sales even with women hoping that if their husbands or boyfriends can't do a good job as Hayden purportedly does, they can at least smell like him time when I saw the billboard selling perfume, released by Ben Abenda and his wife. He said, "Why in the name of God's heaven would I want to smell like Hayden Kho, whose maybe I am feeling subconsciously, or something, unless I like to make people?"

The having passed directly for himself, Hayden's perfume video, I, as a person, I guess made—consciously, or subconsciously—find out what Hayden smells like and maybe my car when he was to improve improve my LEAVES show off autumn colors in Boston, the city of the author's affection.

A STRUGGLE to fit inside either Charles River is an emerging experience.

Beautiful homecoming in Boston

By Antonio M. Caparico
 Contributor

RETURNING TO Boston is like going home, and my love for it has only grown stronger with the passing of time. I went to college in this great city that has experienced many, including Lebanese poet Kahlil Gibran, who made it his home.

In the fall, Boston landscape is one of the most beautiful in the world...the trees turning red, to vibrant colors brighter than the sun, with brilliant shades of red, brown and yellow.

But this season is even richer! Fall Foliage is here, after hurricanes have been hitting and sweeping the Atlantic coastline. And the Midwest has experienced the most severe tornadoes in years, as well as severe flooding, snow and other, causing major damage and destruction.

The effects of global warming are being felt in Boston and many other parts of the continental United States.

At the same time, opponents are warning the impact just when the COP-16 negotiations in Uganda have concluded without success.

cross-binding agreements on how to halt bio-diversity loss and mitigate climate change.

Over many years, we've seen how needed for governments to realize that the planet's weather system has been radically altered by humankind's greed, wasteful consumption, polluting practices, and business-as-usual attitude.

But walking by the banks of Boston's Charles River is proof for recharging one's energies. The river's meandering waters to remind heavy and chaotic lives. Watching the boats and the children playing along its banks helps one shed away stresses and cares.

Indeed, there is something representative about Charles River, the city of Boston and its people that makes one appreciate life. We can allow climate change to destroy Boston and all its charms, to this land and beautiful homecoming, we must find in Boston the strength and the resolve to protect the planet.

Down-bome Manny

SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA.—Incense got a glimpse of the real Manny Pacquiao, a disappointed young man in his late 20s, in a California, where "Manny" launched his new production company the day after his last fight.

But in the day he had a promising 12-round sparring session with boxer the son of his biggest opponent, the Mexican star, Miguel. It was just a sparring session and apparently he had no more serious intentions.

Still he gently answered the questions the journalists were throwing at him. Then, suddenly, apparently one of his friends, yelled to him to go ("Guerrero, yun, yun, yun") and they started dancing like robots away.

Then an overage lady offered him an energy bar. Pacquiao found him a smiling look and smiled, "Loving to eat them because I'm hungry."

Then, again ignoring his handlers, he turned to his friend, adding Pacquiao is quoted, on a state-of-the-art of the P4 has media had brought from the Nike store on the way of going to the airport.

"We need have some 'bored' in my place here," the spokesman said, referring to the time when the boxer had to wait for his fight. "I don't think he'll ever forget when he came from."

Radisson Blu Manila Cebu City, operated by Cebu North and SM Hotels and Conventions Corp., is one of the city's newest hotels.

Radisson Blu has 400 rooms with appointed rooms—and you could go "Business Class" for ultimate comfort.

Queen City's newest royal haven

By Irene C. Perez

CEBU HAS many things to be proud of: the stars, the beaches, the fashion, the burgeoning industries and now, the "it" destination for convention and social affairs—Radisson Blu Hotel.

"It is a very progressive city, apart from great tourist spots, there are a lot of business, firms and centers in the metropolitan area," said general manager Loren Gaudin. "The city's rapid progress has called for an upscale hotel, thus the establishment of Radisson Blu, one of the largest hotels in the Queen City of the South. It is the first branch of the international chain in Asia, which are in the United States, United Kingdom and Africa. In the Philippines, Radisson Blu, on Sergio Osmeña Boulevard,

Radisson Blu

Radisson Blu Manila Cebu City, Cebu City, is operated by the US-based Carlson global travel company and SM Hotels and Conventions Corp.

"But why not put it up in Manila, instead?" "There are large Cebu Manila businesses and we had there a lot of better place in the south for them to stay in. Since Cebu is progressive, there should be a special hotel that could be at par with a lot of larger conventions, events, parties."

Gaudin, who is based in New Zealand, has great things to say about Cebu, where he had been staying for a while. "Cebu is very smart, said business friends," he said. "It's not a city and I feel safe."

Of course, he got to try out the famous Cebu lola. "I have the lola house in Cebu lola house. It has many more and more items, an old and new way. I didn't have a hard time adjusting to Cebu or Filipino food. I can eat anything," he said, laughing.

He also had a look at Cebu's famous places which he described as "made with great local materials and are of great quality."

Those can be found all over Radisson Blu. "The hotel interior has clean straight lines, nothing too fancy. There are wood and concrete, concrete and modern all great things. Furniture are very good quality like the Mobilia and P2 Street beds are from Denmark."

Business-class package

Radisson Blu has 400 rooms, all with high-speed internet access. 27 such the hotel has LCD TV and double and triple rooms with a view.

There are also private offices, comfortable, the business class package includes the following: room of lounge with complimentary breakfast, day in the lounge morning room, express check-in and check-out service, in-room coffee machine, complimentary pressing of garments and daily refreshments in the lobby.

A fully equipped fitness center and spa are available for all guests. Day-use rooms are available in busy periods.

While Radisson Blu is primarily a business hotel, said Gaudin, people also stay here for some R&R. "The hotel is right beside SM City Cebu, the largest mall in the region which houses a busy free area, where they could go shopping. It is also an excellent place to stay from the airport, like the Manila International Airport, the (Davao) SM Hotel and Cebu Convention Center."

Since its opening on September, Radisson Blu has been booked for weddings, birthdays, social functions and weddings.

A THOUSAND STARS, A THOUSAND LIGHTS:

Ayala Triangle Gardens Light Up for Christmas

Taking its cue from the well-received Symphony of Lights show that was launched by Ayala Land in 2008 at the Ayala Triangle Gardens, the much-awaited show will once again fill Makati with the spirit of Christmas through their event, entitled Christmas at the Gardens featuring Parol!

From November 17 to December 23, the Ayala Triangle Gardens will feature a series of Christmas events. Promising to be more impressive and interesting than last year's show, The Symphony of Lights, the lights and sound spectacles will showcase its extensive, imaginative, and delightful best. The show was created by multi-awarded light designer Volume de Amor and award-winning sound designer Arto Joquin.

This year The Symphony of Lights integrates lights and sound design with its surroundings. The show will continue to inspire awe and wonder as LED Panels and beams are added to an array of intelligent lights and LED fluid in vivid colors. Shows will run weekdays from November 17 to December 23.

For Pícol, 2 firsts: a Presidential award and his own 'plaka'

By Pauline Edwards pe@paulineedwards.com

"This is my reward [monetary] for everyone who loves me," said Phelps, building a copy of his newly released CD, "Mending a Heart."¹²

The 32-year-old actor—who will be honored (the Order of the Golden Horse, a presidential lifetime achievement award, is Malabar's province—never imagined being his own “pilot” himself. The idea was first brought to him more than a year ago by Polaris executives, through Weiye's long time partner, Denise Padilla, when on the independence of actors.

Roundoff took a slow pace because Golphy contracted pneumonia. But he was apparently buoyed by the thought that this was another milestone in his long, unfulfilling career.

As he gazed at the movie, with a reverberating inset of life may show in various honey pines, deeply earned morning, he remembered nights when he played records of his music.

A big part

I learned a lot in Ned King Cole and Frank Sayers.² Despite all the lessons.

'House' is no Charlie

LOS ANGELES—"I am no Charlie Sheen," Hugh Laurie actually realized that he had not yet truly won a television series when he landed the role of Dr. Gregory House on the TV series "House."

"Oh, no!" said the actor who stars in the TV series "House." "I'm not Charlie Sheen. I'm a different person. I'm a different person."

When asked how he felt about the role, Laurie said he was "really happy" to be playing a doctor who is "a little bit of a jerk" but who is also "a really good person."
